Last week, inflation data released in the US and China were high on the agenda of global markets. US CPI data, which came in below the expectations strengthened the views that inflationary pressures eased and that the Fed could end the rate hikes. In addition to the foreign trade data that did not meet the expectations in China, annual inflation remained in negative territory, raising concerns about the Chinese economy and the global economy. In Türkiye, balance of payments posted a surplus for the first time since October 2021 with 674 million USD in June. In the same period, industrial production index signaled a recovery on a monthly basis, and the unemployment rate rose to 9.6%. Treasury cash balance posted a surplus of 19.3 billion TRY in June. This week, industrial production data will be monitored in the US, Euro Area and China. In Türkiye, as well as CBRT's Survey of the Market Participants, budget balance and house sales statistics for July will be announced.

Inflation indicators in the US continued to improve in July.

According to data released in the US last week, CPI increased by 0.2% on a monthly basis in July, while annual CPI inflation came in at 3.2%, below the market expectations. In the same period, core CPI inflation excluding food and energy fell to 4.7%, the lowest level since October 2021, supporting the view that inflationary pressures have eased. On the other hand, PPI inflation was realized as 0.3% mom and 0.8% yoy in July, slightly above the forecasts. Following the data releases, the expectation that the Fed will pause interest rate hikes at its September meeting has reached 90%.

Economic activity in China maintained its weak outlook in July.

July foreign trade data released in China last week indicated that the Chinese economy started the third quarter of the year under pressure. China's exports contracted by 14.5% yoy in July, the fastest decline since February 2020, while imports fell well above expectations by 12.4% yoy. Due to weak demand conditions, consumer prices in the country fell by 0.3% yoy in July, pointing to deflation for the first time since February 2021. In the same period, producer prices in the country also declined by 4.4% yoy, extending its course in negative territory for the tenth consecutive month. The weakness signaled by announced data has strengthened expectations that the Chinese government may provide more stimulus to revive the economy.

In Türkiye, current account posted a surplus in June.

In June, current account posted a surplus (674 million USD) for the first time since October 2021. Thus, the current account deficit in the first half of the year came in at 36.8 billion USD, while the 12-month cumulative current account deficit declined to 56.5 billion USD.
